The kidnapping of Getty III was a major news story at the time, and it has since been the subject of several books and films, including the 2017 film "All the Money in the World". The film stars Michelle Williams as Gail Harris, Getty III's mother, and Christopher Plummer as Getty Sr.

The film tells the story of the kidnapping from the perspective of Harris, who was desperate to save her son but was frustrated by Getty Sr.'s refusal to pay the ransom. Plummer gives a powerful performance as Getty Sr., a ruthless and unfeeling man who was more concerned with protecting his wealth than with the safety of his grandson.

The film is a gripping and suspenseful thriller, but it is also a powerful indictment of the greed and selfishness of the ultra-wealthy. Getty Sr. was a billionaire many times over, but he was unwilling to part with even a small fraction of his fortune to save his own grandson. His actions show the true nature of wealth and power, and they are a reminder that even the richest people in the world are not immune to the consequences of their own actions.
