- "The death of my friend was the hardest thing I have ever experienced. I felt guilty that I could not save him. I also felt angry at the war that had taken his life. But even in my darkest moments, I found hope. I found hope in the love and support of my family and friends. I found hope in the resilience of my fellow soldiers. And I found hope in the belief that I could make a difference in the world."
- "I have learned that healing from the wounds of war takes time. It takes courage to face your demons. It takes strength to forgive yourself and others. But it is possible to heal. I am living proof of that."
