The story of Ashraf Marwan, the Egyptian spy who saved Israel during the Yom Kippur War, is one of the most fascinating and untold stories of modern history.

Marwan was born in Cairo in 1944. His father was a wealthy businessman and his mother was a member of the Egyptian royal family. Marwan attended the prestigious Victoria College in Alexandria and then went on to study law at Cairo University.

In 1967, Marwan joined the Egyptian Intelligence Service. He quickly rose through the ranks and became one of President Anwar Sadat's most trusted advisors.

In 1973, Egypt and Syria launched a surprise attack on Israel on Yom Kippur, the holiest day of the Jewish year. The Israelis were caught off guard and initially suffered heavy losses.

However, Marwan had been secretly passing information to Israel for years. He warned the Israelis about the impending attack and provided them with detailed information about the Egyptian and Syrian military plans.

Thanks to Marwan's information, the Israelis were able to turn the tide of the war and ultimately achieve victory.

Marwan's role in saving Israel was kept secret for many years. It was only after his death in 2007 that his story began to come to light.

Marwan's story is a testament to the power of one person to make a difference. He was a true hero who risked his life to save the lives of others.
