The Autobiography of an African Princess is a powerful and inspiring memoir by Princess Elizabeth of Toro, who recounts her life as a princess in Uganda and her journey to becoming a respected leader.

Born in 1936, Elizabeth was the daughter of King George David Matthew Kamurasi Rukidi III of Toro, a kingdom in western Uganda. She was raised in a life of privilege and luxury, but she was also aware of the poverty and inequality that existed outside the palace walls.

When Elizabeth was 18 years old, she was sent to England to attend boarding school. It was there that she began to learn about the wider world and the challenges facing Africa. She was particularly inspired by the work of Martin Luther King, Jr., and she became involved in the civil rights movement.

After graduating from school, Elizabeth returned to Uganda and became involved in her father's government. She worked to improve education and health care for the people of Toro, and she also spoke out against the injustices of the Idi Amin regime.

In 1971, Amin was overthrown and Elizabeth was appointed Minister of Tourism and Wildlife. She held this position for several years, and she used her influence to promote Uganda as a tourist destination and to protect the country's wildlife.

In 1983, Elizabeth was elected to the Ugandan Parliament. She served in Parliament for several years, and she continued to work for the people of Uganda. She also became a vocal advocate for women's rights.

The Autobiography of an African Princess is a powerful and inspiring story of a woman who overcame adversity to become a respected leader. Elizabeth's story is a reminder of the importance of education, the power of perseverance, and the importance of fighting for what you believe in.
