The Modern Single Woman

The modern single woman is a woman who is not married or in a long-term relationship. She is independent, confident, and sexually liberated. She is not afraid to go after what she wants in life and she is not willing to settle for anything less than she deserves.

The modern single woman is a product of the sexual revolution of the 1960s and 1970s. This revolution led to a new understanding of sexuality and a new freedom for women. Women were no longer expected to be virgins until marriage and they were no longer expected to stay in unhappy relationships.

The modern single woman is a powerful force in society. She is a consumer, a voter, and a leader. She is changing the way that we think about gender and relationships and she is making the world a better place for all women.
