In the 1960s, Beigi studied painting at the École des Beaux-Arts in Paris. During this time, he was exposed to the work of the great masters of modern art, such as Picasso, Matisse, and Kandinsky. These artists had a profound influence on Beigi's development as a painter, and he began to incorporate elements of their work into his own paintings.

Beigi's paintings are characterized by their strong sense of composition and color. He often used bold, geometric shapes and vibrant colors to create dynamic and visually arresting works of art. Beigi's paintings also have a lyrical and expressive quality, and he often used his art to explore his own inner thoughts and emotions.

Beigi's work has been compared to that of the Abstract Expressionists, but he always maintained that he was not a member of that movement. He believed that his work was more closely aligned with the Persian tradition of miniature painting, which emphasizes the importance of composition, color, and line.

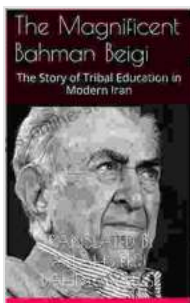

Some of Beigi's most famous works include:

- The Garden of Eden (1967)
- The Prophet (1970)
- The Shahnameh (1975)
- The Persian Miniature (1980)
- The Blue Mosque (1990)

These works are all characterized by their strong sense of composition and color, as well as their lyrical and expressive quality. Beigi's paintings have been exhibited in museums and galleries around the world, and they are included in the collections of many major museums, including the Tehran Museum of Contemporary Art, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, and the Museum of Modern Art in Paris.

Bahman Beigi died in Tehran in 2005. He was 66 years old. He left behind a legacy of beautiful and inspiring paintings that continue to be enjoyed by people all over the world. Beigi was a true master of his craft, and his work will continue to be celebrated for generations to come.
