The library was founded in 1991 by the Reverend Dr. James H. Cone, a prominent theologian and historian of African American religion. Cone's goal was to create a resource that would document the rich and diverse history of African American religious life and to inspire future generations of scholars and religious leaders.

The library is housed at the Candler School of Theology at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia. It contains over 1,000 biographies of African Americans from all walks of life, including clergy, theologians, scholars, activists, and laypeople.

The biographies in the library are written by a variety of scholars, including historians, theologians, and sociologists. They provide a detailed account of the lives and work of African Americans who have made significant contributions to religious life in the United States.

The library is a valuable resource for scholars, students, and anyone interested in the history of African American religion. It provides a unique opportunity to learn about the lives and work of some of the most important figures in African American religious history.
